Info, help and practical advice for all Dads

Being a dad isn't easy

While simply bringing home the bacon might have been good enough in the past, modern dads are expected to play a full and active role in the lives of their kids.

But it can often feel like there's not a lot of support out there for guys – if men are from Mars and women are from Venus, then most of the parenting information out there is written in Venutian. Dads Space is a great new website backed by the Department of Children, Schools and Families (DCSF) that hopes to change all that.

By Dads, for Dads

With its entertaining, no-nonsense approach to parenting advice, Dads Space sticks to the facts and allows you to make up your own minds about what's best for your kids – whatever your situation.

We'll give you the chance to talk to other dads about the pressing issues of the day (toddler tantrums, teenage knife crime, the shocking standard of refereeing during last night's footie), ask our team of experts questions, and contribute your own parenting stories.

Even if you're not after help, there's still lots of great content on the site – you can read stuff for your kids, read hilarious product reviews and find events in your area that'll entertain the kids without boring you senseless.
